Grand jury meets

Crittenden County Grand Jury will next convene April 17 to hear evidence. Grand juries typically meet the first Monday of every other month beginning in February.

County population drops by 2 people

Crittenden County's population appears to be shrinking, according to 2007 population estimates from the U.S. Census Bureau. But the decline is hardly reason for alarm.

The bureau recently updated its estimates for counties across the nation, showing a decline of only two individuals in Crittenden County. The July 1, 2007, estimate for the county is 9,130, making the county the 103rd least-populated of the state's 120 counties.

The county's lowest recorded population was eight years after it was formed in 1842, with an 1850 Census count of 6,351. The most to have been recorded living here was 15,191 at the dawn of the 20th century with the 1900 count.

Meantime, Livingston County's population fell more drastically from 2006 to 2007. The population dropped by 39 to 9,610, ranking Livingston 101st in county size.

The state's most populous county is Jefferson, with 709,264. The fewest Kentuckians, 2,202, live in Robertson County.

Kentucky's population is believed to have grown by 37,030 from July 1, 2006, to July 1, 2007.

Panorama show slated for April 25

Panorama, the Crittenden County High School's comedy and talent show, will be April 25. Anyone interested in performing, should sign up outside Kim Hunt's high school history room.

Auditions for emcee will be after spring break, so if anyone is interested see Hunt or Kathleen Guess.

Facility plan up for review next week

There aren't any plans for new schools in Crittenden County over the next four years, but a district facility plan outlining pending capital construction and renovation projects will be presented to the public next week.

A 15-member committee, comprised of district employees and parents, has been working since August on the latest four-year plan for the district. That work should culminate with a public meeting at 5:30 p.m., Thursday, April 10 at Rocket Arena.

Committee Chairman and Board of Education member Bill Asbridge said last month that no major construction is recommended in the plan, but needed renovations at all three schools and other district facilities are addressed. According to Asbridge, when the next plan is put together in 2011, there should be enough bonding potential for major construction, perhaps even a new school.

While the district's oldest school — the middle school — is more than a half-century old and in the greatest need of attention, the list of specific needs across the school district is daunting, Asbridge points out.

If okayed next week, the plan will need final approval from the state.

Tyler Manufacturing fueling local economic spurt through jobs

STAFF REPORT

Over the last quarter, Tyler Manufacturing Co., has been working through some real growing pains. The locally-owned company operating in the former Tyco building has added about a dozen manufacturing jobs, doubled its lines and increased its product production twenty-fold since Christmas.

And that's not the good news. The best news of all is, that's just a start.

Tyler Manufacturing Co., (TMC) hosted a Crittenden County Chamber of Commerce Business After Hours event last week. Prior to a tour of the facility and its sister company, Par 4 Plastics, across the street at Marion's Industrial Park South, company leaders spoke briefly to the nearly two dozen Chamber members in attendance.

President Joe McDaniel and his son, director of sales Ryan McDaniel, laid out the company's strategy for the coming months.

"We're up to 18 full-time employees," Joe McDaniel said. "In the next six months, we will be adding 25 to 30 more jobs in this facility."

And that's not all. Within two or three years, company officials expect to have the sprawling 24 acres and 113,000-square-foot building full of additional lines and workers. The growth is largely due to new automotive industry contracts, anticipated growth in the current customer base and development of a new product by start-up company Xtreme Tracker, which shares the manufacturing facility with TMC.

Xtreme Tracker, a GPS, Web-based tracking system was largely developed right here in Marion. Ryan McDaniel said production of tracking device models will start in May and June, respectively. Plastic housings for the XT1 and XTM products will be fabricated at Par 4 Plastics and TMC will assemble the units. The devices will be sold to suppliers and leasing agencies of heavy equipment, but they have various other applications, too. The United States military is interested in the concept.

Tyler Manufacturing purchased the Tyco property in 2002, only a few months after the Bermuda-based electro-mechanical components manufacturer closed its doors, displacing some 300 local workers. Tyco had operated in this community for fewer than two years before it closed. It had bought out Siemens' electro-mechanical division in 1999.

Judge-Executive Fred Brown, himself a former Siemens employee, said it's been a long, difficult road trying to replace those lost jobs, but applauded Tyler

Two local school boards over the next week will begin vetting their applicants for superintendent of schools.

Both Crittenden and Livingston school districts are searching for a new chief administrator of schools to replace their respective outgoing superintendents. Monday was the application deadline for both districts. Both new district heads will begin their positions July 1.

John Belt, superintendent of Crittenden County's school district since 2005, announced his resignation in February. The head of Livingston

Lasher

County schools, Jack Monroe, announced his retirement the same month.

Because Crittenden County schools were on spring break this week, information on the number of applicants was not available, but board of education Chairman Chris Cook said that information will be available next week, prior to the review of applications by the board and a mandatory screening committee prescribed by state law.

In Livingston County, board members met with their screening committee Monday evening to begin the process of vetting their 17 applicants. Board member Tony Lasher of Salem said names and locations of applicants will not be made public until the final seven or eight are selected for further review.

Over the next couple of weeks, Lasher said, the seven-member screening committee will begin reviewing applications and checking on USDA data. If Payne is about acreage and corn futures remain steady, that value could reach $10 million in 2008.

But all that glitters is not gold, the Extension agent warns.

Payne said farmers almost need record market prices to be able to turn a profit, especially considering the high input costs for what native Americans called maize.

"Crops are at record highs, but what most non-agriculture people don't realize is that inputs (fuel, seed, fertilizer, chemical, etc.) are also at all time highs," he said. "The profit margin hasn't changed much."

The farming sector isn't getting fat, local experts say.

"Some are making less money at $5.50 corn than at $2 corn," said Charlie Hunt, who just closed out the busy winter season for milling corn into stock feed as co-owner of Marion Feed Mill.

That's why the USDA disclosed Monday in its annual "Prospecting Plantings" report that last year's record corn production could drop

Budget plan spreads hurt across board

By DARYL K. TABOR

MANAGING EDITOR

From higher education to water bills, Crittenden Countians could soon feel the pinch of what one state legislator is calling a "lean, mean budget."

Kentucky lawmakers were planning to meet into the night Wednesday, seeking legislative approval on a budget compromise crafted over the last week by House and Senate leaders from both parties. Though a final spending plan had not been approved at press time Wednesday, the proposed budget wipes away $1.35 million in funding for Crittenden water and sewer projects slated for a half-million dollars in coal severance monies due the county and will likely force a college tuition hike for Crittenden graduates.

"I'm not at all happy about the budget," Rep. Mike Cherry (D-Princeton) said from Frankfort Tuesday night about a two-year spending plan he calls lean and mean.

Neither was Crittenden County Judge-Executive Fred Brown pleased with a plan

High court offers retrial to Dameron

STAFF REPORT

The Kentucky Supreme Court has ordered a new trial for Ronnie D. Dameron, 46, of Marion who was serving a 70-year prison sentence for allegedly sodomizing an elderly woman in the Deer Creek Community in 2002.

The state's highest court threw out the June 2006 conviction handed down by a Crittenden Circuit Court jury. The supreme court's one-page ruling was short and vague, and did not provide any details as to why it overturned the verdict.

The state supreme court did cite a 2006 Jefferson County case, Shane vs. Commonwealth, in support of its ruling. In that case, the Kentucky Court of Appeals held, according to information at KentuckyCourts.net, that a prejudicial error occurs when a trial court fails to strike a juror for cause and the defense is forced to use one of its nine strikes to challenge the juror.

In other words, it appears that the verdict was overturned due to a technicality stemming from the jury-selection process.

Dameron is currently at the Kentucky State Penitentiary at Eddyville. He was not eligible for parole and was not scheduled for release until 2075. It's unclear what will happen to the suspect between now and a new trial. His last bond, prior to conviction, was $10,000 cash.

Commonwealth Attorney Zac Greenwell said earlier this week that he is preparing to re-try the case. No trial date has been set.

Dameron was serving 50 years for first-degree sodomy and 20 years for first-degree burglary. In Kentucky, when an offender receives a sentence of 20 or more years, the case is automatically appealed to the supreme court.

If he is indeed retried, it will be the third one for Dameron in regard to the same case. His first trial in early 2006 ended in a mistrial because jurors could reach a verdict. In his second trial, Dameron was found guilty of entering a 64-year-old woman's home in rural Crittenden County and robbing and sodomizing her. He was the only suspect ever identified by state police.

Crittenden corn production expected to rise

STAFF REPORT

A new gold rush is on in America, and the glittering prize is getting ever easier to find around here.

More than 22 square miles of Crittenden County were planted in corn last year, mirroring the record-high corn production nationwide. While only a fraction of the nation's corn was found in local soil in 2007, production here was nearly twice that of five years earlier. Last year, the U.S. corn harvest was 93.6 million acres.

"A lot of farmers are following corn behind corn and abandoning their normal corn-soybeans-corn rotation," said the county's Agriculture Extension Agent Corey Payne.

Though soggy weather in western Kentucky hindered March planting, Payne said 2008 corn acreage could eclipse last year's.

"From what I have been hearing, there will be at least the same amount of corn planted as last year and possibly a slight amount more."

Thanks to strong corn prices, due in part to increased ethanol production, last year's local crop was worth almost $8 million, based on USDA data. If Payne is right about acreage and corn futures remain steady, that value could reach $10 million in 2008.

But all that glitters is not gold, the Extension agent warns.

Payne said farmers almost need record market prices to be able to turn a profit, especially considering the high input costs for what native Americans called maize.

Mineral museum dubbed 'rare treasure'

As June approaches the Ben E. Clement Mineral Museum in Marion is gearing up for its third annual mineral show and dig.

If you haven't taken the time to visit the museum, you're missing out on a real treat that's right here in your own backyard.

The museum, located next to Fohs Hall in downtown Marion, is home to the world's largest collection of fluorite samples. Now that might not sound too interesting to the average reality TV show fan, but in fact it's quite intriguing. The museum displays its collection in gripping fashion with the use of fascinating lighting schemes. The region's storied mining history is also on display at the museum, which is named for the late Ben E. Clement, one of the country's foremost geologists in the early 20th century. The county's rich fluorspar mining history is traced through documents, journals, displays and old machinery exhibited inside and outside the museum. Crittenden County is believed to be the first place in Kentucky where fluorspar was mined.

Tina Walker, manager of the museum, sent us a copy of a letter to the editor that a couple of visitors submitted to the Madisonville Messenger newspaper recently. Don and June Greenfield of Madisonville wrote, "there is a rare treasure in Marion in nearby Crittenden County. Rock formations more beautiful than I have ever seen anywhere are on display."

Walker was proud of the reaction from those visitors, but not surprised. Virtually everyone who views the collection of crystals and rocks is amazed at their beauty.

Later this summer, on June 7-8, the museum will host its big show and dig. The digs are especially attractive to rock hounds who come in from all across the county to scratch and scrape around on area farms in search of interesting specimens. They find dozens of beautiful rocks because this part of the country is known for its abundance of unique crystals and minerals.

While you're surfing the 'Net this week, check out what's online about the mineral museum. For starters, go to MarionKentucky.us/ClementMineralMuseum, or just Google search Clement Mineral Museum. You can also check out my blog for a short video.

3 still living from Company I, 149th

To the editor: A statement made in a recently published (paid) obituary in The Crittenden Press needs a clarification.

A March 13 obituary of a Marion man stated that he was the "last surviving member of the Crittenden County 149th National Guard unit." However, I know that to be incorrect.

M/Sgt. Joseph K. Wigginton (Ret.), was also a member of Company I, 149th Infantry, 38th Cyclone Division, and he currently lives in San Antonio, Texas. I speak with him regularly, and can provide a phone number and address for anyone who wishes.

To elaborate further, there are two more members of Company I still living - James R. Holsapple of Seville, Fla., and Harold "Runt" Johnson of Luray, Va.

Mark Mahan
Columbus, Ohio

Editor's note: The Crittenden Press has confirmed that all three men mentioned were, in fact, wartime members of Company I, 149th Infantry, 38th Cyclone Division during World War II. Evan Shelby, who died March 9, was the last surviving of the old Marion National Guard unit to still be living here.

Comprised of guardsmen from Kentucky, Indiana and West Virginia, the 149th Cyclones saw action in the Pacific Theater.

Dropout situation not easily fixed

To the editor: I applaud Vince Clark, Holly White and John Belt for discussing this issue of dropouts and dealing with the problem instead of ignoring it.

I know that there are many problems and issues that can cause a student to drop out of school, but the real shame is with the parents and policymakers. Fifty percent of these students will end up becoming a burden on taxpayers, and I'm sure more than likely their children will become the same and the situation is a snowball effect.

Don't get me wrong, I'm not saying kids who grow up in bad situations can't overcome them. My brother and I grew up in a single-parent home with a fixed income. Both of us are very successful, testament to the fact that children can beat the odds. Poverty isn't an excuse for failure and quitting, it's motivation for success.

I'm not for big government, but come on lawmakers, should we be letting children drop out of school so early on in life?

The other blame falls on parents. To put it bluntly, what the heck are these people thinking? Don't they want better lives for their children?

The most important job any adult can have is being a parent. It's odd that you have to have a license to drive a car, but there is no prerequisite for parenthood. Maybe we should make it mandatory to have a license to procreate and raise children.

Crittenden County's school system is fighting an uphill battle with this. I encourage all business people and community leaders to help our school system in any way possible to help fix this problem.

I graduated from Crittenden County High School and most of the faculty and administration was there when I attended school. I think the school system has very good educators and administrators who care about the future of each and every student. I think they do a tremendous job with the resources they have at their disposal, and the tax base they have to work with.

No one likes higher taxes, but if money and more personnel will help fix this issue - and lower the number of welfare dependents in our county - why would everyone be so against this?

Down the road it would only better our community and our schools.

Court had choice to avoid new tax

To the editor: I have read Mr. Stan Hoover's letter to the editor in the March 13 edition of The Crittenden Press.

The fiscal court did have choices and has a job to do, that each of them seem to not want to perform. I know that a lot of the money shuffled by them is state money, and they can neither cut nor spend it elsewhere.

I have also seen the 2007-08 and 2008-09 budgets and know that the fiscal court's own figures do not account for a $220,000.45 surplus in the 2007-08 budget. And nowhere in the 2008-09 budget is it mentioned, and certainly, in none of the public meetings was this brought to light by any member of the fiscal court.

Only after viewing their working copies with one of the magistrates did I find this out. I can hardly feel that we were treated as constituents by our elected officials!

In past statements, Judge-Executive Fred Brown has stated that we elected him to do a job, and he was determined to do it. Unfortunately, the job he's doing is to us, not for us.

As for the two-percent insurance tax, I have just contacted two out-of-state companies about quotes for insurance - mail-order that will not be subject to the tax, and I urge others to join me.

I also join Ezra McDowell in asking (in his March 20 letter to the editor) that this bunch be voted out of office next election.

Stan Wheeler
Marion, Ky.

Editor's note: According to previous reporting by The Crittenden Press, what Mr. Wheeler is suggesting regarding insurance purchases out of state, may not be completely accurate.

Based on Press interviews with local insurance agents and county and state officials in the Department of Insurance, providers are prohibited from selling insurance without the tax to Crittenden County residents or on Crittenden County risk that would normally be subjected to the new two-percent premium tax enacted earlier this month. That tax does not go into effect until July 1, 2008. Therefore, any price quotes made today would indeed not be subject to the added levy.

However, any premiums after July 1 would be subject to that tax, if the company fully complies with state and local laws. This newspaper would be remiss if it failed to fully disclose these facts in light of suggestions made in Mr. Wheeler's letter.

We do not dispute his claims, but only offer the preceding as our view of the law and ordinance based upon our own independent research.

Donations help to feed unfortunate

To the editor: Once again, the Alan Feinstein Foundation has issued $1 million challenge to participating food pantries.

Millionaire Alan Feinstein will donate $1 million that will be divided proportionately among all participating food pantries. (To learn more about the Feinstein Foundation log on to www.feinsteinfoundation.org)

What's the catch? You must state that your donation is made in response to the Feinstein Challenge and it must be made during the months of March and April 2008. Helping Hands will receive matching funds based on cash, checks, pledges or canned goods donated. Canned goods are counted at $1 per can.

This challenge coincides with Livingston County Helping Hands' spring food drive. School will soon be dismissing for summer vacation. Our clients will be responsible for feeding their children breakfast and lunch, which they have been receiving at school. With the rising cost of gasoline, food, medicine and doctor's visits, low-income people are having more and more difficulties providing for their families.

Here is your chance to double your donation. Accept the Feinstein Challenge. Donate cash, pledge money, or donate non-perishable canned food. Just be sure to label your donation as a response to the Feinstein Challenge and make sure your donation reaches us before April 30.

Helping Hands very much appreciates your continuing help in our on-going fight against hunger in Livingston County.

Writer clarifies senator's service

To the editor:

The Crittenden Press of March 27, 2008, contains a characteristically entertaining historical article by Brenda Underdown. However, the article includes a minor error, not of Mrs. Underdown's but in the recollection of a Mr. Whitt or the recording of that recollection by Evansville Courier columnist Joe Aaron. The story states that in 1918 a Sen. Williams "of Alabama" attended the funeral of Sen. Ollie M. James in Marion. However, neither in 1918 nor at any time before 1918 was there a Sen. Williams from Alabama.

The reference is almost certainly to Sen. John Sharp Williams, a U.S. Senator from Mississippi in 1918. Sen. Williams was a staunch Democrat and supporter of President Woodrow Wilson, as was Sen. James. While hardly a liberal on race, Sen. Williams was no race-baiter and, in fact defeated a prime race-baiter, James K. Vardaman, for the Senate in 1910.

Sen. Williams also was a great wit and storyteller. An example of his art can be found by Googling the phrase "When John Sharp Williams was a kid," then clicking on the first (the New York Times) result and then clicking on the "View Full Article" tab.

Satan's lies grow from Eden to today

The lie from hell Satan told to Eve in the Garden of Eden. "You won't really die. God lied. His Word is not true," is snowballing throughout all the world.

Satan has had millions of demons down through history who have carried that theme into all of life.

To believe evolution - that we came here through any method other than what God's Word - is to again call God a liar, to proclaim His Word is not true.

That was the hoax that started the greatest era of civilization, and the greatest nation on earth and history to begin its descent into the abyss, guaranteeing the demise of both.

As lies go, it doesn't stop there. It has snowballed. People think they can kill an unborn or half-born human being, and it not murder or sin.

The lie then swells to, "You can kill a terminally ill person, or a person who wishes to die, and that is not a murder or sin."

Next, the lie invades the most sacred of God's institutions, marriage between one man and one woman, by saying, "You can be homosexual or lesbian and marry the same sex and still be a Christian."

No nation yet, beginning with the very first of all nations, has survived following the path of lies started in the Garden of Eden by the enemy of God and man, Satan himself, saying: "God lies, God does not really mean what He says; the Bible was for back then, not now." None survives that legitimizes denying or going away from the creator's book of instructions on how to live this life and in this world.

Now the ungodly, atheistic, socialistic, American Civil Liberties Union is demanding anyone who prays on public property - and especially in Jesus' name - is to be put in jail. And the demand that anyone passing out Bibles on a city sidewalk to school children be handcuffed and taken to jail, which has already been done.

Where did America go? She is supposed to be the land of the free and the home of the brave. What did all our service personnel - who fought and died to help us keep the freedom of speech and religion - really die for? Did they die for a bunch of godless, atheistic thugs to dictate our life to us and put us in prison for praying and in Jesus name? I think not!

The Bible tells us we can only get prayers through to God in Jesus' name and the devil knows that. So to tell me I can pray but not in Jesus' name is to tell me I cannot pray at all.

All hell could not stop Daniel, and the lions did not want him for supper. May God still have millions of Daniels alive and well who refuse to cave in to illegitimate laws and ruthless atheistic thugs who propose to usurp God.

To think of anyone, regardless of how diabolical they are, to die without hope and without God is heart-breaking.

What is so horrible is that all these godless people who die in their sins will be a million times worse off in the end than being thrown into a lion's den.

That pain and death will be sudden. But the lake of fire they will be thrown into will be far more painful and forever and ever.

For a creature to bad-mouth and back-talk its Creator is sheer folly, and it does so at its own peril.

May God send a worldwide awaking and a Holy Spirit conviction of sin, righteousness and judgment before He pulls the plug and brings people to Himself, remembering His precious Son died for the least of these.

BUDGET

that could force the fiscal court to find another source for $440,000 in jail payments once shown as a line item in the state budget.

"They are putting a lot of counties in a really tight pinch," Brown said of the General Assembly.

Though the county will still receive $500,000 due to coal severance funds, the budget compromise has removed language that once spelled out exactly how it would be spent. Those included:

- $440,000 for debt reduction related to the new 133-bed Crittenden County Detention Center;
- $20,000 for the Ben E. Clement Mineral Museum;
- $30,000 for Dam 50 tourism improvements; and
- $10,000 for a memorial park on the riverfront in Dycusburg.

Without line items in the budget identifying the specific uses for this money, the fiscal court will have to make application to the Governor's Office of Local Development in Frankfort before spending each dollar. And, that half-million in coal severance money is intended for economic development projects, jeopardizing approval on what had been planned as next year's payment on the new jail.

"It's a tough pill to swallow," Brown said Tuesday evening. "We're looking at some more tough decisions over the next six months."

Last month, the fiscal court passed a controversial two-percent levy on insurance premiums to generate $150,000 in order to help balance the county's own 2008-09 budget.

Also missing from the state's proposed budget plan as of noon Wednesday was $2.4 million in funding for water and sewer projects in both Crittenden and Livingston counties. Those included $900,000 in debt service funds for Crittenden-Livingston Water District, $1.05 million for U.S. 60 sewer line extensions in Marion and replacement of the city's 80-plus-year-old cast-iron water main along Main Street and $100,000 each to the cities of Salem and Smithland for municipal water and sewer upgrades.

"I'm disappointed the Republicans took away all the sewer and water money," said Sen. Dorsey Ridley (D-Henderson) Tuesday as he prepared for a late-night caucus meeting.

The senator blamed the GOP-controlled Senate for eliminating bonding that would have provided for those projects. He was hopeful, however, that a last-minute amendment could be worked out between the parties to reinstate that bonding for similar infrastructure projects across the state.

"I feel confident our influence will keep these," Ridley said of the sway he and Rep. Cherry are hoping to use to revive the local projects.

Marion City Administrator Mark Bryant said it appears replacing an aging, leaky water main will be put on hold.

"I think we will be able to handle all of our sewer extensions okay, but the water main through town will have to wait until we secure another source of funding," Bryant said.

Donnie Beavers, superintendent of the rural two-county water district looking at almost $1 million in lost funding over the next two years, is fearful of a rate increase but remains hopeful it can be avoided.

The head of Crittenden-Livingston Water District said that money was earmarked for payments on the $4 million Phase 13 project the utility is just finishing this week. This 90-mile, final phase in water line extensions for both counties will add many new customers. After this phase, the district can boast of 98-percent coverage in both counties, or about 3,400 customers.

"If there is not any other funding available, we're looking at a five-percent rate increase," Beavers said of the five-man board who makes such decisions.

Beavers added Wednesday morning that the district has a lobbyist in Frankfort urging lawmakers to put money back in the budget. Even if that does not happen, a rate increase to rural water customers could be avoided by refinancing older bonds at today's lower rates.

"If that happens, we're not looking at a rate increase," the superintendent said.

Beavers

As late as four hours before a scheduled House budget vote, Cherry was hopeful for infrastructure funds.

"There is still an effort being made to get water and sewer projects back in the budget," he said Wednesday morning from his office.

Under the same spending plan, higher education would see a three-percent cut in funding. Though not pleased, Murray State University Board of Regents Chairman Alan Stout shuttered to think that cuts could have been worse. Gov. Steve Beshear and the House had supported plans for a 12-percent reduction in higher education spending.

"It would be difficult for us to maintain the current level of service and programs without tuition increases," Stout said about the proposed three-percent reduction for colleges.

Statewide program cleans up county

Commonwealth Cleanup week in Crittenden County kept the convenience center east of town hopping last Friday and Saturday. On Saturday, a mound of televisions and a trailer of washers, dryers, freezers and other white goods showed the results of the free dumping offer. Several bins of trash were compacted and filled again by inmates from the Crittenden County Detention Center. Above, Kenny Williams (right), and Mickey Shelton, two of the work-release prisoners, unload garbage from a truck.

references. After that, the committee will once again meet with the board to weed through candidates.

The same process will take place in Crittenden County, with the screening committee meeting Tuesday to begin reviewing files. Another meeting of the group later in the week will set the course for background and reference checks.

Cook also said names will not be released until five finalists are selected.

A deadline of May 20 has been set by the Crittenden County Board of Education to hire a superintendent.

Man pleads guilty to sexual abuse

A Frankfort man accused of numerous sex crimes against three female relatives who once lived in Crittenden County pleaded guilty to the charges Friday in Franklin Circuit Court.

According to The State-Journal newspaper, Lawrence Limp, 44, accepted a plea agreement on two counts of second-degree sexual abuse, five counts of first-degree sexual abuse and two counts of intimidation. As part of the agreement, Limp admitted in court that he sexually abused the women, two of which were juveniles at the time the abuse began. The victims were 11, 14 and 20 years old at the times the crimes started in 1992. They reportedly continued through 2007.

Limp

The claims against Limp were first revealed when the family was living in Crittenden County a few years ago. A Kentucky State Police investigation found the abuse took place in both Franklin and Shelby counties. Limp is still facing similar charges in Shelby County.

Kentucky, county jobless rates drop

Ninety-three Kentucky counties, including Crittenden and Livingston, posted lower annual unemployment rates in 2007 than in 2006, while 21 counties were higher, according to the Kentucky Office of Employment and Training in the Kentucky Education Cabinet.

Unemployment in Crittenden County was at 5.9 percent last year, compared to

2007 Unemployment

Unemployment across the state's 120 counties was mostly down in 2007 from the previous year, according to statistics from the Kentucky Office of Employment and Training.

In 2007, three Kentucky counties had an annual jobless rate at or above 10 percent, down from three the year before.

Woodford County's 3.9 percent annual jobless rate was the lowest in the commonwealth in 2007. Jackson County recorded the state's highest annual unemployment rate in 2007 — 13.9 percent.

Unemployment statistics are based on estimates and are compiled to measure trends rather than actually to count people working. Civilian labor force statistics include non-military workers and unemployed Kentuckians who are actively seeking work.

Woman charged with shoplifting

A Marion woman suspected of stealing a denture adhesive was arrested in Princeton last month after store employees filed shoplifting charges against her and a Princeton man.

Shellie P. Jenkins, 37, of Nipper Road just outside of Marion and Robert L. White of Princeton were charged March 22 with theft by unlawful taking under $300 after workers at the Dollar General store on North Harrison Street reported the suspected crime.

According to The Times-Leader newspaper, store employees told authorities that the pair stole a tube of Poligrip valued at $3.25 and left the store. Police located the couple a few minutes later from a description of the vehicle in which they left the store.

Both were lodged in the county jail.

Presidential visit

National VFW Ladies Auxiliary President Virginia Carman on Saturday received a key to the City of Marion from Mayor Mickey Alexander upon her visit to the local VFW post. Carman will visit posts in all 50 states before leaving office in August. Saturday's visit to Kentucky brought that total to 38, with Marion being one of the smallest towns she will visit during her entire term, said past District 2 Commander Michael Whitfield of Providence. "It's a tremendous honor," he said. Local auxiliary members greeted Carman as well as regional and state auxiliary presidents Saturday at their post headquarters on North College Street.

S.D. chamber sues Sturgis over rally

FROM WIRE REPORTS

Sturgis, S.D., is suing its namesake in Kentucky over the naming rights to annual motorcycle festivals held in each city.

According to the Evansville Courier & Press, the Sturgis (S.D.) Area Chamber of Commerce filed a lawsuit March 20 in Western Division of U.S. District Court at Rapid City, S.D., claiming it owns the naming rights to "Sturgis" and motorcycles.

Little Sturgis Rally Inc., President Billy House told the Courier & Press that relations between organizers of the Union County event and South Dakota's Black Hills Motor Classic have always been cordial.

But Scott Reiman, president of the Sturgis, S.D., chamber, said the organization "has long been on record that it intends to defend the rights of the Sturgis Motorcycle Rally."

House first learned of the Chamber lawsuit from a reporter with the Rapid City (S.D.) Journal.

The city of Sturgis, S.D., is not involved, and its annual payment to the chamber is not being used to pay for the suit, city manager David Boone told The Associated Press.

The lawsuit seeks to have the Little Sturgis organization permanently restricted from using "Sturgis," "Sturgis Rally" and "Little Sturgis Rally" associated with any motorcycle-related event. The South Dakota chamber also seeks money.

"I think it's shameful. The chamber of commerce does nothing for the rally."

The AP reported Shannon Willett of Rapid City, a former resident of Sturgis, Ky., told the Rapid City Journal in a letter that the Kentucky town of 2,000 needs its rally to generate income. It has no big grocery stores or department stores and relies mainly on farming and coal mining, she said.

Jack Hoel of Sturgis, S.D. — son of the Sturgis rally founder the late Pappy Hoel — called the lawsuit an "embarrassment."

"I think it's shameful," Hoel told The AP. "The chamber of commerce does nothing for the rally. The only thing they do is try to sell their logo."

House told the Evansville newspaper he does not anticipate any hindrance to this year's Little Sturgis Rally, which is slated for July 17-20.

by as much as eight percent in 2008. American soybean production, typically one of the top crops in Crittenden County along with corn and hay, is expected to jump 18 percent. With domestic wheat stocks at a low not seen since close of World War II, six percent more wheat acreage is also expected.

Hunt said local farmers are not getting rich by selling their corn to ethanol producers.

"Generally speaking, most of it is used for feed," he said, adding that most Crittenden County yield is either sold or fed locally to livestock.

A versatile crop that does not have to be processed, corn can be used as fodder from the moment of maturity on the stalk, Hunt said. Therefore, many locals simply grow it for their own animal feed or silage, never transporting it to market for the profits seen by those fueling ethanol production.

But for those looking to cash in on corn, USDA reports the outlook on prices remains strong.

Don't be fooled by the devil

Did someone pull an April Fool joke on you? If so, don't let it bother you. The devil had been fooling people since the Garden of Eden. Eve was his first victim. But not his last.

Cain was fooled into thinking his offering was acceptable, but God requires a blood sacrifice.

Those who planned to build a city and tower that reached into heaven were foolish. It was known as The Tower of Babel.

Satan fooled King David into thinking he could sin and not suffer the consequences.

with his wife told Abram to bear a son with Hagar. That foolish act is still causing conflict in our world today.

Joseph's brothers sold him and foolishly told their Father that wild animals had destroyed him. But there came a day of reckoning, at a time of desperation they had to face the consequences of their actions.

Satan meant to put an end to Jesus' ministry when He was crucified on the cross. How foolish was that thought?

Pilate was fooled into thinking a huge stone would prevent the Resurrection of Jesus. Thank God, "He lives. He lives. How do I know He lives? He lives within my heart."

The devil would have us believe that this life is all there is. But the Bible says, "It is appointed unto man once to die and after that the judgment."

Today, we hear many say, we're all going to heaven, just taking different roads to get there. This is the devil's biggest lie. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, the life: No man cometh to the Father but by me."

Don't be fooled by the devil.

Coffee Shop renovation continues

The Coffee Shop on Main Street in Marion will remain closed for a couple of more weeks while renovations continue. The longtime restaurant will also be getting a new name.

STAFF REPORT

The Coffee Shop in Marion will be closed for a couple more weeks while the downtown eatery undergoes some kitchen repairs.

Owners Bill and Kory Wheeler have operated the restaurant for several years, but only recently purchased the building where it is located. Some major renovations are coming in two phases, Kory Wheeler said. Customers will not see much of a change when the Coffee Shop re-opens in mid April, but more is to come. Most of the current work is being done in the kitchen area where new floors, walls and equipment are being installed. Plans are to shut down again in June when a second round of repairs will be made. At that time, the building will get a new roof and the dining area will be completely refitted. Additionally, the upstairs area, known as the Loft, will be put into shape for meetings and banquets.

The Wheelers also own and operate The Front Porch restaurant on South Main Street. It remains open daily, except for Wednesdays.

The Wheelers say a much bigger change is also coming this summer. Since the Coffee Shop is getting a full facelift, they are also working on a new name which will be released in our editor's blog in The Crittenden Press Online.

Manufacturing, its owners and its affiliate company, Par 4 Plastics, for their expansion here.

"Eighteen jobs in Crittenden County is like 1,800 in Louisville," Brown said.

Since Christmas, Tyler Manufacturing has added 14 lines that produce about 400 products, mostly tail lamp assemblies for automobiles like the Toyota Camry, Honda Accord and Ford Thunderbird. It also has a contract to make rear light assemblies for the Harley-Davidson V-Rod motorcycle.

Across the street at Par 4 Plastics, which is owned and managed by the same family, there are 143 workers in the injection molding plant. It, like TMC, was a start-up company formed by local people.

"We wouldn't be where we are today without the loyalty of our workforce," Ryan McDaniel said. "Our team members are the most important part of this company."
