NPR's left me with no satisfaction

Sometimes, I like to let down my hair and just let in to NPR. Mostly I do it to talk to people of class right-wing editors - or at least one in particular. Why? Public Radio has been on that makes me think.

I found that I don’t have a general idea of the news I am listening to. Even so.

But enough, enough, enough. Today’s the week the only thing Sep- tober first is back into its financial reserves

The Cincinnati State's student newspaper, The News & Views, published the following article about fiscal considerations. The article discusses the alternative for fuel savings and introduces the concept of a comprehensive plan for fuel savings.

Fiscal court considering wholesale alternative for fuel savings

The budget has been presented to the fiscal court for approval and must be made to the state for the next fiscal year. The budget will include the following:

1. The allocation of funds for the budget year
2. The budget for the upcoming fiscal year
3. The budget for the future fiscal year
4. The budget for the state
5. The budget for the county

The budget will be presented to the fiscal court at a future meeting.

Hodge is All-Around; Wallace qualifies, too

State champion is top rookie on once sold horse

Every horse has its story and for once sold horse, the story is one of perseverance and talent. The horse, named Hodge, was purchased by a local farmer named Wallace, who is known for his passion for horses and his ability to find the next big thing.

Hodge was once a racehorse, but his career on the track was cut short due to an injury. He was on the verge of retirement when Wallace decided to give him a second chance. He took Hodge to a new home and started him on a new career as a show horse.

Wallace trained Hodge tirelessly, giving him the care and attention he needed to become the best he could be. His hard work paid off, and Hodge was soon taking home blue ribbons and awards at shows across the state.

The two, now known as Hodge and Wallace, are a dynamic duo, and their story is one of hope and determination. They continue to work hard, and there’s no telling what they’ll achieve next.
