With new ruling, county has tool to enforce tax ordinance on hundreds of delinquencies

BY CHRIS EVANS

PREDD EDITOR Crittenden County is launching a renewed and more aggressive effort to collect unpaid payroll and net profits taxes, some of which date back to 2019, as it implements a large increase in occupational tax rates and business license fees starting July 1.

The county's fiscal court recently adopted a new budget that includes substantially more projected occupational tax revenue from $402,800 in the current fiscal year to $1.05 million in FY26, and estimates net profits tax receipts will jump from just over $100,000 this budgetary cycle to $212,000 in the new fiscal year. Those increases are based on the higher rates, and additional revenue could be realized through a more determined strategy to enforce compliance.

Business owners and payroll clerks will need to be aware that the county's payroll and net profits tax rates will triple from 0.5% to 1.5% next week. The City of Marion's rates are also doubling. Together, the combined city-county occupational tax rate for employees working in town will rise from 1% to 3%. At the same time, the annual business license fee is doubling from $25 to $50 for both. Letters have gone out to taxpayers that explain these changes.

Letters are also now being prepared for delinquent taxpayers who have failed to pay or file as required by the county's occupational tax ordinance. This will be the final warning, officials say, before further steps are taken, which now could include criminal charges based an appeals court's recent interpretation of existing law.

In a decision earlier this year, the Kentucky Court of Appeals ruled in Albert Marshall v. Commonwealth that cities and counties have the legal authority to impose criminal penalties, including jail time, for violations of local ordinances. The court affirmed the constitutionality of KRS 83A.065, which permits municipalities to classify ordinance violations as misdemeanors. Failure to pay county taxes is punishable by criminal misdemeanor charges, according to language in Crittenden life jump like beats Everything worthwhile has a starting line, a mid-race struggle and a finish line. Along the way comes anticipation, escalation, drama, perhaps conflict, and sometimes results we wanted, and sometimes those we didn't. There can be unfortunate letdowns, loss or disappoint-

It's the same for all big life events whether it's a birth, an athletic event, a marriage, maybe a divorce, a trip and even death.

There are numerous crescen-dos along life's path. Certainly, you can name an event with peaks and valleys, like the blips on a heart monitor. Maybe you're going through one now.

What, my husband asked, got me thinking about life's crescendos? Simply, I explained, we wake up one day in our 50s wondering how we got here and reviewing events that were the epitome of building up, experiencing and letting down. Did we enjoy the ride enough? Did we do our best? Did we adequately celebrate the successes and achievements?

As a light example, our family came out of travel ball retirement recently to spend our first weekend in this summer's 100degree heat watching our 17vear-old do what she loves with teammates she's played with or against over the past 10 years.

There was anticipation, preparation and maybe a few nerves for our center fielder.

There was the opening pitch, a little controversy and drama from an opposing team, and a crescendo that de-escalated with wins, losses and an eventual tournament championship.

Good times. Similarly, our oldest is nearing the end of a big trip she planned for months. No doubt she experienced the highs and lows created by uncertainties, amazing experiences despite major language barriers. And no doubt there will be a pretty substantial letdown and time for reflection when it's all said and done.

Life is normally too busy to stop and soak it in, to realize you're experiencing a ride you'll never repeat, a race you can never recreate. There are countless crescendos for things you've planned your whole life, including a home, kids and a career. Once you reach that pinnacle, it's time to start planning for the end (or start a second career like some of us).

With retirement closer than some of us would prefer to admit (or not close enough for others), and an empty nest on

Fohs planning for 100th year

Plans are starting to take shape for a major celebration marking the 100th anniversary of Fohs Hall, Marion's historic civic and cultural venue.

According to a letter from Fohs Hall Board President Alan Stout, the centennial will be commemorated with a weekend of events in October 2026. Festivities will begin Friday, Oct. 23 with the Centennial Fohs Hall Ball, a formal, catered event featuring the 20-piece Todd Hill Orchestra from Murray. The evening will include a fundraising element to support future preservation efforts.

On Saturday, Oct. 24, a public rededication ceremony is planned at 2 p.m. Board member Brennan Cruce will portray Julius Fohs and read from the 1926 dedication speech.

The late Julius Fohs, a successful geologist from Marion, privately funded construction of Fohs Hall almost a century ago and gifted it to the citizens of Marion. Centennial organizers have requested a keynote address from a member of the Fohs family, perhaps one of his grandsons, the children of the late Frances Sohn, the daughter of Julius Fohs.

The board continues to research historical documents, including archived Crit-

Mayor: Weather complicating water treatment

Marion

Mayor D'Anna Browning is sounding new alarms as the city's water situation grows more precarious heading into the height of summer. With raw water levels low at both Lake George and Old City Lake, the mayor warns that intense heat and evaporation could further strain the system.

Browning said she has begun contacting state agencies and other area leaders, placing them on alert that Marion may need assistance if conditions continue to deteriorate. Her goal, she said, is to avoid a return to the desperate early days of the city's water crisis in 2022, when Marion had to truck in raw water and distribute bottled water to residents.

Particularly troubling now is an elevated level of manganese in the water supply. Manganese is a naturally occurring mineral that becomes more concentrated when water levels drop. At high levels, manganese can cause discoloration and foul taste, and it may damage water infrastructure. It is recommended to not drink water that has manganese above the 0.3 mg/L. According to water plant reports provided by the city, manganese levels in finished water early this week were hovering around 0.1 mg/L or less.

While not considered hazardous in the short term, manganese levels present operational challenges. Utilities typically manage the mineral through filtration or chemical oxidation, but those methods become more complicated when concentrations spike.

"As I have said before, our will not be until we can be fully served by Crittenden-Livingston Water District," Browning said. "We're seeing quality issues return, and they go hand in hand with dropping levels in our raw water lakes." City officials are urging residents to remain patient and understanding as the community continues to navigate the challenges of its ongoing water crisis. Browning emphasized that state or federal support may once again be critical if conditions worsen.

Budget adopted, Corps supported, rental agreements okayed at court

Crittenden County Fiscal Court adopted its $14.27 million budget for fiscal year 2025-26, with road and jail expenses making up the bulk of the appropriations.

The Road Fund accounts for the largest share at $4.65 million, or 33.3% of the total budget. The Jail Fund follows closely with $3.83 million, representing 27.5% of all appropriations. The General Fund totals just under $3 million, or 21.2% of the budget.

Smaller appropriations include $823,865 from state grants, $851,800 in grants $454,155 for 911 services. New revenue lines include a sharp increase in expected occupational tax receipts, jumping from $425,000 to $1.05 million, and net profits tax, up from $85,000 to $212,000.

The budget anticipates $30,000 in new opioid settlement funds with $190,000 of carryover in that account. The county has budgeted $3,000 for Drug Coalition, $6,000 for utilities at the substance abuse recovery center on Bellville Street and $7,200 for administrative costs.

Among notable expenses are $2 million for the Cave-in-Rock Ferry, but the county is only a pass-through agent for funding that service. It is paid by Kentucky and Illinois state transportation departments. The budget includes $1.5 million in jail staff wages. Due to shortfall in this year's jail budget, employees at the Projected grant-funded projects include $850,000 for a new ambulance building and $500,000 for an expansion project at Fohs Hall.

The court amended its administrative code to increase the county's contribution toward employee health insurance premiums. Under the revision to Section 5.34 of the code, the county will now pay 85% of the premium for singleplan coverage, up from 75%. Employees will be responsible for the remaining 15%, down from 25%, through payroll deduction. Family plan coverage remains available at the employee's additional expense.

In other business, the fiscal court approved the purchase of cardiac monitors for ambulances at a cost of $10,500 for two devices. They are used units being bought from Lyon County.

•The court approved a measure to explore new electronic payment methods for recurring expenses, citing increasing number of checks lost in the mail over the past two years. The delays have resulted in costly late fees and administrative issues.

Recent changes under House Bill 555 allow fiscal courts to authorize electronic funds transfers (EFTs) for approved ex-

City investigates its options for controling kratom sales in town

Marion City Council heard from health professionals and residents last week as it began considering possible regulations on kratom sales at local convenience stores.

The herbal substance, sometimes referred to as "gas station heroin," according to one person providing testimony last week, has been available in Marion and across Kentucky without significant oversight. It is often sold in pill or powder form near energy drinks and supplements.

Healthcare specialists Laura Wood and Katlin Loveless from Livingston Hospital addressed the council, sharing both risks and potential benefits associated with kratom use.

"It's not regulated. A 10-, 11-, or 12-year-old could walk in and get it," said Wood, a Marion resident and nurse practitioner. "That's not good, especially because of the addiction risks."

Loveless added that kratom acts as a stimulant in small doses but can mimic opiates in larger amounts. She noted some people use it in recovery, but its unregulated status poses safety concerns.

"It doesn't show up on standard five- or seven-panel drug tests," Wood said. "And people can get hooked on it."

Kentucky healthcare officials have issued warnings about kratom, and several states have banned the substance altogether. It is not approved by the FDA for any medical use.

A representative from a local store told council members that kratom is kept behind the counter and that buyers must be 21 with ID required and scanned at purchase.

Mayor D'Anna Browning said the city will continue discussions to determine if any local measures can or should be taken.

'We don't want to create another problem," she said.

The city's legal advisor, Bart Frazer, pointed out that under current Kentucky law, enforcement would require civil action, not criminal.

City approves fine increase for animals

Marion City Council last week approved Ordinance 25-11, increasing penalties for violations of the city's animal control regulations.

Under the amended ordinance, fines have been significantly raised. Violations of ordinances 90.02, 90.03 or 90.05 will now carry a fine of up to $100 per offense, up from $20. Offenses under city ordinance 90.08 now range from $50 to $150, previously $10 to $25. Violations of 90.06 and 90.07 may result in fines up to $500, doubled from the previous $250 cap.

The ordinance specifies that penalties apply per animal and are cumulative, with each day of noncompliance counted as a separate offense.

Salem renews pact with Critt-Liv Water

The City of Salem and Crittenden-Livingston Water District have renewed their wholesale water contract, agreeing to a 20-year term at a rate of $3.34 per 1,000 gallons. Any future rate increases will require a 90-day notice and approval from the Kentucky Public Service Commission.

Kenergy/Conexon broadband should be here by 2026

Representatives from Kenergy and Conexon told Marion residents Tuesday during a public meeting that its proposed high-speed broadband service won't be available locally until 2026. The network, which will serve all Kenergy electricity customers, was initially scheduled for late 2025.

The delay is due to pending word on additional federal funding. However, company officials confirmed the project will move forward with or without new financial backing.

The Press will be following up on this matter and have further details next week.

School communication, student phones among new laws making debut on Friday

A new state law taking effect this week will dramatically change how Kentucky educators and students are allowed to communicate, and Crittenden County school officials have already taken steps to comply.

Senate Bill 181, passed during the 2025 General Assembly, mandates that school boards implement a traceable and structured communication system for all school-related messaging. In response, local teachers have been instructed to scrub their social media accounts of student connections and to cease any direct communication with students via phone, unless using district-approved platforms such as the Parent Square app.

Crittenden County Board of Education is expected to approve a waiver system that would allow parents to authorize communication between their children and teachers or coaches through other means. Such a move could help maintain flexibility, especially in extracurricular settings, while remaining within the scope of the new law.

SB 181 is part of a broader wave of legislation going into effect later this month, addressing issues from education reform and public safety to workplace regu-

Other laws taking effect Friday, June 27 include:

House Bill 4, which eliminates diversity, equity and inclusion (DEI) offices at public colleges and bans related training pro-

House Bill 399, penalizing disruptions to General Assembly proceedings with up to a Class D felony for repeat offenders.

House Bill 398, which restricts Kentucky from enacting workplace safety rules stricter than federal standards.

Senate Bill 73, strengthening penalties for sexual extortion and mandating prevention education in schools. Senate Bill 19, which requires a daily moment of silence in public schools and permits weekly moral instruction absences.

House Bill 208, compelling districts to set limits on cellphone use in classrooms.

House Bill 132, requiring immediate educational instruction for students in inpatient treatment facilities.

Senate Bill 22, legalizing mobile barbershops and salons and easing licensing retest procedures.

House Bill 191, expanding eligibility for state veterans' cemeteries to National Guard and Reserve members.

House Bill 520, revising Kentucky's open records law to give law enforcement broader discretion in denying records requests that could pose investigatory risks

Some legislation, including House Bill 15, which lowers the minimum age for driver's permits, and House Bill 495, which overturned the governor's ban on conversion therapy, took effect earlier this year under emergency

The changes reflect the priorities of the Republican-controlled legislature and mark a significant shift in education policy, communication protocols and public safety standards across the state.

Hardin Baptist names Cunningham pastor

Hardin Baptist Church has named Kory Cunningham as its new lead pastor. The announcement came June 17 following a church-wide vote, where more than 700 members cast ballots in overwhelming support, passing the motion with 99.4% approval.

The vote marks a significant yet seamless leadership transition. Cunningham, who has served ate pastor, steps into the role long held by father, his Bro. Ricky Cunningham, who has served the church for 42 years. Bro. Ricky will continue his ministry as Hardin's pastor of care. Hardin Baptist is located in Marshall County on and Murray. Members gathered to celebrate the Cunningham family last week following the announcement, including his wife

US 641 between Benton

Katie, and their four children, Crider, Finley, Garnett and Evie Kate. Cunningham is the son-in-law of Alan and Doris Stout of Marion.

Cunningham's journey at Hardin began when he was just three months his father assumed the pulpit. Though raised in the church, he says his life was transformed during his freshman year at Murray State University, where he surrendered to the gospel and a call to ministry.

Since then, Cunningham has pursued a life of service, earning a Doctor of Ministry from Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, a master Seminary, and a bachelor's degree from Murray State. He is also known for his weekly podcast that encourages deeper love for the Bible, as well as his passion for the outdoors, coffee and discipleship.

Hardin Baptist, founded in 1893 in the small farming town, is a vibrant church family of hundreds, committed to glorifying God by growing ciples. The church is led by a 19-member staff and guided by biblical teaching, community outreach and global mission work.

Though the town's population hovers around 300, Hardin Baptist continues to thrive, driven by a shared mission and a unified spirit that now welcomes its next generation of leadership.

Worshiping alongside others encocurages us in our faith

Question: A friend at work keeps inviting me to go to church with him. I tell him, "Look, my faith is a personal matter. I worship God in my own way. I don't really need to go to church. Am I looking at church wrong? What benefit is there of going to church anyway?

Answer: By faith, each individual repents of sin and places his or her trust in Jesus to forgive their sins. That experience is personal. Although it's personal, it shouldn't be private. Our relationship with Jesus can't be completely experienced in isolation.

The writer of Hebrews explicitly urges us to regularly worship together. "Let us not give up meeting together, as some are in the habit of doing, but let us encourage one anotherand all the more as you see the Day approaching (of Christ's return)" (10:25). A healthy, growing Christian enjoys his local family of believers and enthusiastically participating in corporate worship with them.

Two vitally important things we can do together that we can't do alone are: hearing the testimonies of others' walk with Christ fuels our faith. As we meet together and recount God's faithfulness and provisions in our lives, every one present is encouraged.

Also, in corporate worship, we are provoked "to love and good works" (Heb. 10: 24). As we sing praises, pray, testify, listen to the reading of God's Word and hear the gospel preached, the Holy Spirit encourages us to love and serve every-

Few memories remain of civilian conservation corps

Part of Marion's history now lost is that of the Civilian Conservation Corps or CCC that was once located here. There is nothing left of the camp for one to even know it was here. But it was here, a town within its own camp, and the men helped our county with many worthwhile projects. From the archives of the Crittenden Press we can read about their projects.

Roosevelt's Tree Army

In the year 1932, New York Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, in an effort to help the nation, started on a mission to help find an end to the rampant unemployment and economic chaos that gripped the country. He planned a fight against soil erosion and declining timber resources, utilizing the unemployment of our young men.

Then Governor Roosevelt revitalized the faith of the nation with several measures, one of which was the Emergency Conservation Work (ECW) Act, more commonly known as the Civilian Conservation Corps or the CCCs. With this action, he brought together two wasted resources, the young men and effort to save both. He proposed to recruit thousands of unemployed young men, enroll them in peacetime army, and send them into battle against destruction and erosion the land, in an

of our natural resources. Before it was over, over three million young men were engaged in a massive salvage operation.

Passages

In May 1933, Marion finds out that Crittenden County may get a conservation camp from the forestry and soil erosion program of now President Roosevelt, if Kentucky should use its quota of 5,250 men.

If all the men are used it would be necessary to start 10 forestry camps and 16 erosion camps in the state. Most of the timber projects will be in the eastern part of the state and the soil erosion projects in western Kentucky.

June 1933 - Marion was selected as the site for Crittenden County's soil erosion camp. Maxwell Park in Marion would be the selected site for the (Maxwell Park, also called Cook's Park, was located at the present day site of Riley Tool and Machine Shop on Moore Street.) Plans were at first made to have a boys camp here, but orders were changed and word received that veterans from the World War would be sent here instead. (The boys camp was actually young, unmarried men from 18 to 25 years of age.)

Camp Marion's setup

The camp would be in Marion at least six months and probably two years, the Major stated. Work would be carried on in Crittenden and surrounding counties from this camp.

July 1933 - One hundred and forty-eight men are now in camp. Camp Marion is under the leadership of Lieutenant Trautman and Lieutenant Smith, of the U.S. Navy, John Staylor, of the U. S. Infantry and E. J. Rodenberg, U. S. Medical Reserve. Mr. Ashbrook will have charge of fieldwork, which will begin as soon as weather will permit.

The camp is looking better each day as they worked hard everyday to get things done. They constructed streets and sidewalks, and the camp grounds looked more like a city than a camp.

A large sign was being made out of rock showing the number 1542, and would be set in the extreme west end of the camp facing the street.

A bath house was also being constructed for the camp, and it would have the most modern conveniences in plumbing. Carpenters were getting started on the kitchen and are really getting work done, as the mess hall would soon be needed for the men and employees enrolled at the

The Fieldwork started

Fieldwork started soon after the men arrived. Thirty badly eroded farms were selected as sites for the first work. The erosion work on the farm of Mr. Conger and Mr. Cartwright has been completed and work will be started this week on the farm of Rev. Spurrier at Mattoon. Other farms that were included in this work were the T. Crider farm on Bridwell Loop, the Cloyd farm on Crooked Creek, and the Terry farm land in Forest Grove.

Much of the lands of western Kentucky are good for farming. For reason they were long ago denuded of their trees to permit cultivation. The land of this section is rolling, in many places quite hilly. With the destruction of the trees the rich, loose soil began to wash away and now about a billion tons of it helps to make up the Mississippi River Delta. This is the sort of thing the CCC has set itself to stop. A working force was ordered to a hillside farm, almost useless for any purpose whatsoever. Its waffled fields almost unfit for cultivation, affords no pasture, and would not support trees nor even weeds.

The men started constructing small dams, seldom more than 3 or 4 feet high and 15- to 20-feet long. The dams, placed up and down the length of each gully, help stop the drifting of the soil. Gullies were leveled by shovel, plowing or scraping to a gentle slant. Small diversion ditches were dug across the top of each hill on the project, above the gullies. These gullies henceforth will carry only such water as falls on the hillside itself.

The dams' place at the foot and the head of each wash were always built of native stone, for they must bear the greatest loads. Intermediate dams were constructed of logs, poles, brush, or wiremesh backed by turf, in bad spots stone is used again.

After this base work was completed, black locusts and black walnut seedlings were planted in the loosened, leveled soil behind the dams and over the entire extent of the project.

Almost all rain water would now either sink into the ground where it falls or be carried off by the diversion ditches. The trees will grow and the hollows behind the dams will gradually fill up with dislodged soil.

Marion Camp planted 120,000 black locusts, and 63 bushels of back walnut seedlings, on the farms where work had been completed.

Owners of the farms where the work was carried were to agree not to attempt to cultivate the land or to turn stock on it for a period of five years. At the end of that time each will be the owner of a fine stretch of recovered land, level, unmarked by weather and bearing a good growth of young

Camp Marion razed

On Nov. 1, 1935, the camp was being abandoned, because the aim and purpose, that of soil erosion, for which it had been brought to this county had been accomplished.

In December 1936 we learn that Camp Marion was fast becoming a part of Marion's history. The buildings are being razed and the materials being moved to other camps to be rebuilt. The first buildings to be wrecked were the four barracks, then followed the wrecking of the recreation hall, kitchen and officers' quarters.

After all the buildings were removed, the grounds put back in shape to return to the Playground Association, owners of the land.

Camp Marion was no more, and is now only a faint memory of Marion's past, but its presence being here left a legacy to the people and to the land of Crittenden County.

Soon, in 1935, another government project known as the Works Progress Administration or better known as WPA, would be coming to Marion and Crittenden County and we would also benefit greatly from this project, through the building of roads, several major structures throughout the city and county and the beautification of local grounds..

TAX

Continued from page 1 County ordinance 0-12-005, which was adopted in 2012 when the occupational license fee was established by the fiscal court.

The appeals court ruling, supported by an amicus brief from the Kentucky League of Cities, reaffirms that local governments can enforce compliance with fines, court action, and even incarceration. This decision gives Crittenden County powerful new leverage in pursuing longstanding tax delinquencies.

Under Section No. 12 of the county's occupational tax ordinance, willfully failing to pay taxes or submitting false or fraudulent returns can be prosecuted as a Class A misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of up to $500 and/or jail time of up to one year. The law also applies to those who assist or counsel others in filing false information.

Even before criminal prosecution was on the table, Crittenden County had civil tools to compel payment, although enforcement has been inconsistent in recent years. The ordinance provides the following civil and financial penalties, a 5% penalty per month for failure to file or pay, up to 25% of the total tax due (minimum $25) and 12% per annum interest on unpaid taxes. Unpaid taxes are considered personal debts, collectible in court and the county may sue for back taxes, penalties, interest, attorney fees and court costs.

While civil remedies have always been available, they require time-consuming and costly legal proceedings. The new ability to pursue criminal prosecution for intentional evasion changes the equation, giving the county a faster and more forceful mechanism to hold taxpayers accountable.

Based information on gleaned from documents received by The Press through an Open Records Request in April, there are almost 1,000 individuals and businesses currently registered as active taxpaying accounts, but many more surely operate outside the system. It is believed that some out-of-county businesses never register and others are operating in the shadows within the county. They are local contractors, including those such as handymen, farmers, lawn mowers, taxis and Uber contractors, who either fail to get a license or never remit a net profits report.

Subcontractors or any businesses or individuals receiving 1099s must also be reported by employers and are required to file their own local tax returns and pay taxes.

Some businesses legally avoid large tax bills by showing little or no profit. In those cases, the $50 license fee often covers their liability, but they still must file a year-end net profits report. Many simply don't, and the failure to file is itself a violation.

Also troubling are federal employees, like those working for the U.S. Postal Service, whose wages are not subject to automatic local tax withholding. These workers are required to self-report and remit payroll tax quarterly or annually. However, county officials say many ignore repeated letters and fall years behind.

The enforcement problem is not just about fairness, it's about revenue. As costs rise for essential services like ambulance operations and 911 dispatch, the county has had to raise taxes to cover budget shortfalls. But those increases fall disproportionately on those already paying. Last year, magistrates increased the county's insurance premium tax from 2% to 3%, adding between $160,000 and $180,000 to annual revenues. Unlike the occupational tax, the insurance tax is collected by insurance companies and remitted directly to the state for distribution to counties, According to the county, delinquent accounts, particu-

As the new tax rates take effect, The Crittenden Press is publishing a full list of those currently registered to pay. Unlike delinquent property taxes, which the county is required to publish annually, occupational tax delinquency records are partly protected by state law because they include private financial information. However, the names and addresses of the delinquencies are subject to the state's open records law. The Press has opted, at this time, to not print the list of occupational tax delinquencies, yet once legal action ensues, that could companies, trade contractors such as plumbers and electricians, small businesses in town, nursing and other healthcare contractors, large corporations operating within the county, loggers, farmers, landlords and a host of others including an engineering firm that did work for local government. Almost all of them are ongoing businesses practicing today in the community.

While the county's active account list published in this edition is extensive, it remains incomplete. Many continue to evade their responsibility to obtain a business license, file required reports under local ordinance and pay the occupational tax. Some businesses included on the active account list printed in this week's newspaper are delinquent on

With a recent Kentucky Court of Appeals ruling affirming the legality of criminal penalties for ordinance violations, the county now has a stronger enforcement tool. It is up to county officials and the courts to ensure the tax is applied fairly and consistently. Without meaningful enforcement, the occupational tax becomes a voluntary system, easily ignored by those with no intent to comply.

Skirka, who led the team to Omaha for the first time in the program's 86-year history, was named NCAA Coach of the Year and was reportedly a finalist for the head coaching position at Duke University.

Shortly after Duke announced Corey Muscara of Wake Forest as its new head coach last week, D1Baseball's Kendall Rogers reported that Skirka had agreed to remain with the Racers.

Contract terms have not been disclosed, but Skirka is expected to become the highest-paid coach in the Missouri Valley Conference.

FREDONIA HISTORIAN

The following information concerning the Fredonia High School baseball teams was written by Don Boone for the "The History of the Fredonia Valley" in 2010.

Fredonia High School fielded a baseball team through the years. The first yearbook to mention baseball was the 1958 Jacket which showed several seniors who participated in baseball as listed in their individual activities. Each yearbook thereafter included seniors who listed baseball as one of their high school activities.

During a game in the 1967 season, a fly ball richocheting off a light pole hit Johnny Beavers, breaking his nose, which meant the end of his baseball career.

Fredonia probably only fielded a baseball team when there were enough players interested enough to work to play baseball. Playing on the baseball team meant early spring practice. Players had to mow, drag the infield, put the lines and bases down, all before every home game. They had to "work before play."

Boone remembers Buddy Rogers, Allen "Shorty" Riley, and Dick Tucker umpiring several games for the high school teams.

"Three outs in three seconds" is another memorable FHS baseball story. Fredonia had a triple play during the spring season in 1965. Tommie Baker was a junior and catching, Jerry Yancy would have been at third, Dennis Traylor was at shortstop, Dougie Phelps was playing first base and Mac Boone was playing in the outfield.

The pitcher may have been David "Butterball" Fraliex. Runners were on first and second (no one can remember who Fredonia was playing). The batter hit a sharp line drive between shortstop and second. Dennis Traylor caught the ball going to his left from shortstop side of second, stepped on second and threw to first.

Louis Litchfield was the coach. Some of the other players on the 1965 team are believed to be Kenneth Hanks, the only senior, Steve Baker, "Little Charlie" Phelps, Bruce Perkins, Larry Yancy, Larry Belt and maybe Eddie Taylor.

"As American as baseball and apple pie" is a phrase that exemplifies our American culture.

Baseball continues to be America's pastime. It is the sport that generations have grown up playing, remaining a steady, comforting game throughout many times of change in this country. It is played at some level in virtually every American town, on dusty sandlots and in billiondollar stadiums. While some say it's not an exciting game to watch on TV, no one would argue that it's the best sport to watch live with family and

Baseball is a game of traditions, from the opening song, "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," to the seventh inning stretch. There are peanuts, hot dogs, catching fly balls, homeruns and other traditions that continue to make baseball an American rite of passage. So participate in America's pastime this summer by heading out to the ballpark in your town!

'54 packed with family time

What started as a search for a late 1990s or early 2000s Jeep Wrangler took an unexpected twist that has turned out quite meaningful for Sam Grau and her family of four.

Though she was looking for something more modern, Grau's husband Tim found his wife a camouflaged 1954 Willys Jeep in Marshall County. The couple spent nearly six months completing cosmetic upgrades including a new Beryl Green paint job.

"It's a hobby," she said. "We laid out in the garage until 2 a.m., some nights working on it."

The former military vehicle is unique in its own right, but the Beryl Green paint job Tim gave it is definitely a head-turner.

"We looked at a Dupont color pallet from the year it was made, and we discovered Beryl Green was an actual color from the era," she said.

Mechanically, it's as original as possible - still running on its original engine and transmission, with three forward gears, reverse, 4x4, and high/low settings.

"We've modernized only what we had to - new gauges, seats, light covers, and steering wheel. It has a folding windshield and everything else is original," she said.

Nostalgia rides shotgun with Sam Grau in her 1954 Jeep Willys, whether for farm work or a trip to town.

"It's broken down a few

Frequently accompanied and used to plow fields, haul by a 1947 Willys trailer used hay, or fix fence rows. It was to haul kayaks or gas tanks, built for all-purpose life. Grau's ride is quite the contimes, seems like it's always versation piece.

The Jeep has come with some good life lessons for Graus' teenage daughters, both of whom can drive it and have learned to answer all the frequent questions such as its year and where they obtained it.

"It's а conversation starter, and it's nostalgic not just for Jeep enthusiasts," Grau said.

There's a deep military and farming legacy tied to these vehicles, and Grau and her family have heard many stories from people they met at the gas station or other stops in town.

After World War I and World War II, many surplus Jeeps were sent to farms

You may make it home without incident, you may get stuck on the side of the road and need to call for help, or you may be able to get to your destination but not in the mode of transportation planned. God doesn't promise everything to be perfect.

"We take it out about once a week, not for show, just for the fun. But it draws people in - not from just Jeep folks, but anyone who remembers. It starts conversations, turns heads, and often brings up stories from veterans or old farmers," Grau said.

Since the Graus live on a hobby farm raising cattle and hay, their Willys fits right in. It's not going to break any speed records. It tops out around 40-45 mph.

Grau said people have asked her to price it if she wants to sell, but she isn't interested.

"We're not planning to sell it because the memories are worth more than the money," she said. "No one will or ever have the experience with that hunk of metal that I had refurbishing it with my husband. Sentimental yes, but between his knowledge and skill and my ability to turn a wrench or two and follow directions, for the most part, we had a fun time rebuilding it."
